MUD! MUD! MUDDY!

Fourth of July Celebration a Big Success.

RAINS KEEP DOWN ATTENDANCE.

But the Programmes Are Well Carried Out.

And the name of the weather was mud!

All did their part well but the damp weather didn't help. He got in his worst possible work on all Oregon celebrations. No such rains have ever been known in Oregon on the Fourth.

The forenoon program was wet down. The rain was turned on at 5 a.m., and there was no more artificial irrigation needed that day. It kept up at intervals just when it could do most damage, always hitting the great features square between the eyes. The humpety dumpty procession has probably never been equalled on the coast. The result would have been nearly double if the Calathumpians had been favored with a fine day.

The officials and the Salem committee labored heroically and with untiring energies, in spite of the weather. But they were afraid of the south wind that had suddenly blown up and many elaborate decorations and features of great beauty had to await developments only to be knocked down and dragged out at the last moment. The rain was a corker.

HOW IT WENT OFF.

Promptly at 10 a.m. the marshals, officers of the day, orators and readers, with floats and all were started off promptly, headed by the H. A. C. band and floats such as were never before seen at Salem. Following order of parade was observed.

THE FLOATS.

Float, Miss Alice Steiner Columbia Chariot, Mrs. R. D. Gilbert as peace ship of State, 14 "young" ladies.

The army.

Oregon State Flowers, 30 "little" girls.

Minerals.

The Natives.

OTHER FEATURES.

Boys' fire brigade.

Exempt firemen with hand engine.

Tiger hose cart.

Silky steamer.

All were covered with flowers and streamers and beautifully manned by uniform citizens.

The line of march as advertised was closely followed.

INDUSTRIAL PARADE.

Here again the rain played havoc and only half as many were represented as had been planned.

Gray Bros., with hardware, bicycles, mowing machine, etc.

J. A. Rotao, furniture.

Salem Steam Laundry.

Howard, the house-mover, having a small car suitably lettered indicative of his trade.

The Silverton stage advertising its route to Silverton and Willamette springs.

Aug. Hockstein's cigar manufacturer—the famous La Corona.

Salem Building and Loan association.

Slab wagon of the Capital Lumber Company.

H. G. Sonnenburg, the grocer.

Fredland & Livingston, the tent makers and second-hand furniture dealers.

Au Oshara self-shaver.

Two wagons loaded with wood with banners calling attention to the Woodchopper Union.

AT THE FAIR.

Several thousand people standing under the drizzling rain extricated when the literary exercises were to take place.

Second upon the rapidly crowded platform were Major Claude Gaudin, president of the day; Rev. G. W. Green, chaplain; Major W. J. Dwyer, master; Hon. Tom H. Tongue, master Justice. Master of the supreme bench; Major W. S. Lovett, the general's private secretary; marshal of the Fair Franklin Examiner, and other gentlemen. Among the guests were 80 American gentlemen who had come from the grand hotel to the capital of Hungary on the Danube river, 6,000 miles away, to witness an Independence day in the capital of Oregon on the Willamette river. He declared the entire celebration as very creditable to the people of Salem.

The Salem, Salem and Marion bands played "Independence" in unison, all adjured to their themes owing to the rain and consequently only a small number of the audience heard the reading of the Declaration of Independence and the oration by Hon. Tom Tongue. This is John Ferguson's 10th anniversary under Mr. Ferguson's committee, the principal two

IN THE AFTERNOON.

Commercial, State and Court streets for blocks were crowded with patriotic citizens at 2 o'clock to witness the minor sports of the day. The roofs of a number of Salem's business houses were covered with men and boys from which positions they had an excellent view of the proceedings. Promptly at 2 o'clock the exempt firemen made a run on Commercial street from Ferry street to the eastern at the intersection of State and Commercial streets making excellent time, and being heartily applauded by the large assembly. A line of hose was laid very rapidly and a stream was soon shooting into the air.

The paid fire department then gave an exhibition drill. A run was made to the center at Commercial and Court streets in a remarkably short time. A terrible accident was narrowly averted by the coolness of Elmer White, who was driving the blacks attached to the 7000 pound La France engine. After passing onto Commercial street a man with a single horse rig, standing opposite the Y.M.C.A. rooms, turned his horse around and started to cross the street. Seeing the engine coming he stopped the animal and attempted to back against the curbing. Elmer White, driver of the black team, noticed the danger and succeeded in guiding the flying steel to the middle of the street just in time to prevent a terrible accident. As it was the hind wheel of the engine gazed the shoulder of the horse attached to the buggy. The next number on the program was that in which the small boys were deeply interested—the turning loose of a greased pig at the intersection of State and Commercial streets. After a lengthy chase the animal was captured by Charles Smith. A second one was turned loose at Commercial and Ferry streets later in the afternoon. Both animals were in excellent condition, weighing 140 pounds each. The 100 yard foot race was won by Grant Taylor, G. M. Shollan second and John Farmer third. O. Neal of Salem, won the 220 yard race easily, the three sprinters in the preceding race, entering this one also. The obstacle race came next in which there were six entries. The distance run was one block and in that distance each was required to circle a barrel or box twice and crawl through a sack and scramble over a three foot hurdle. Wm. Stewart was the first to finish, Fred Byrne second. The prizes were not awarded owing to a foul being entered against Stewart claiming he circled the barrel but once.

ple made a success of it in spite of all obstacles and conquered.

The burlesque orations were full of broad jokes and innocent fun by Frank Davey and E. Hofer and were heartily enjoyed, as was Prof. Norris's singing.

The decision of the judges as to the characters deserving the prizes is as follows:

Best crowd—1st prize, Indian travelers; 2d, cow boys; 3d, artillery.

Most original—1st prize, Salem hog; 2d prize, giraffe; 3d prize, Professor Nurse.

Funnest character—1st prize, Queen Lib; 2d prize, monkey on horseback; 3d prize, Ole Olson.

The fireworks at night were also cut down to a minimum on account of the wet weather and many beautiful pieces could not be fired off at all.
